The Great Sticker Swap

A playground discovery about swapping, value and thoughtful choices.

A new favourite game

At Ashwika’s school, lunch and recess had a new favourite game: swapping. Lucky and Veer looked at each other’s lunches with curiosity.

A delicious question

One lunch smelled amazing. It was aloo paratha: flatbread stuffed with spiced potato. The friends were curious about the food each had brought.

Something new to try

The other lunch had pandesal, soft Filipino bread. The friends agreed to swap half a paratha for one pandesal. Each wanted to try something new.

A swap they both enjoyed

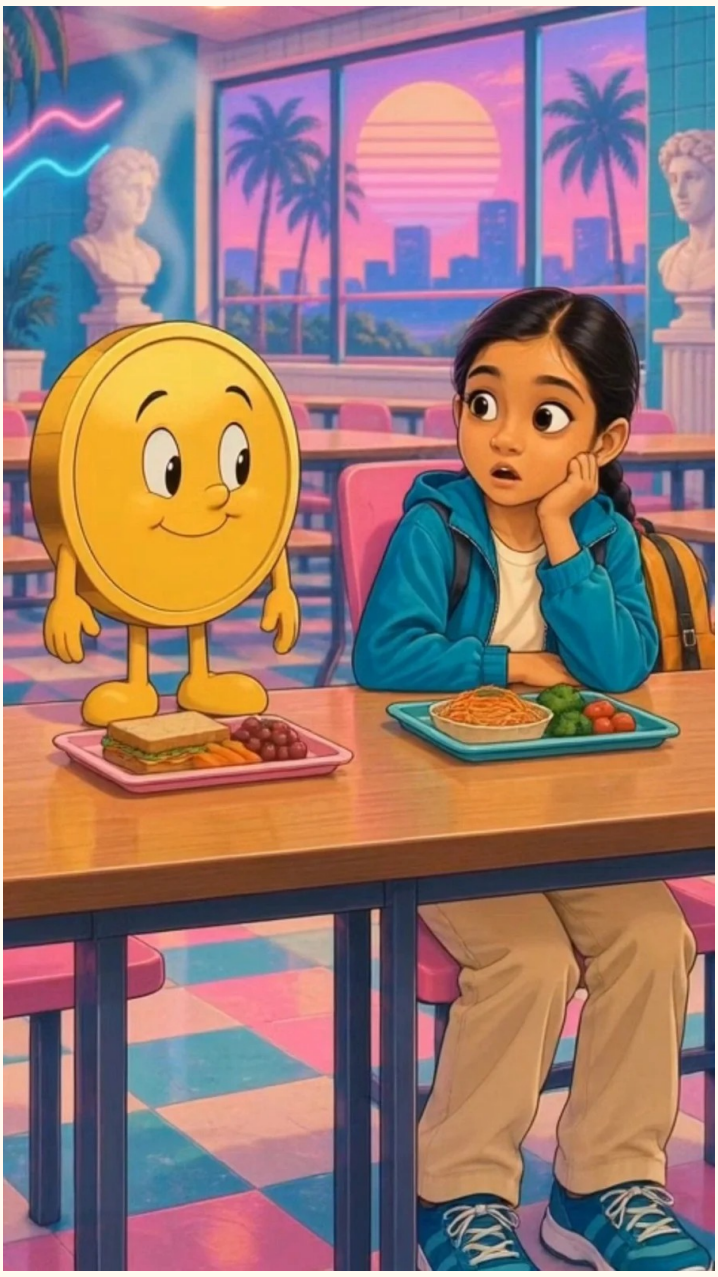

Both friends took a bite and smiled. Ashwika noticed that each had given something and received something they wanted to try.

Grown-up note: follow school rules before sharing food.

A talking coin’s clue

Their cheerful coin guide explained trading: swapping something you have for something you want. This kind of swap can happen without using money.

Fish for a basket

The coin recalled another example: three fish exchanged for one basket. Both people wanted what the other person offered.

Look at both sides

The coin explained why that example worked: both people gave something, and both received something they wanted. A thoughtful swap considers both people.

STORY PAGE 8

Ashwika’s sticker wish

At recess, Ashwika had a trade in mind. She had two rainbow-star stickers, but wanted a glow-in-the-dark moon for her book.

An extra rainbow star

Ashwika asked her best friend Leo whether he would swap a moon sticker for her extra rainbow star. She explained what she could offer.

A match for two collectors

Leo had been looking for a rainbow star. He agreed to the swap. Ashwika wanted the moon, and Leo wanted the star.

A very shiny offer

Across the playground, Dev had a problem. Jordan offered a super-shiny gold dragon card. Dev called Leo over to help him think about the offer.

Twenty cards for one

Jordan wanted all of Dev’s cards in return. Dev had 20 original cards. Was one shiny card something he wanted enough to give up his whole collection?

No time to think?

Jordan wanted an answer right away or the offer would end. That pressure gave Dev another reason to pause and think carefully.

Understand the exchange

The coin shared two checks: both people should understand what they are giving and getting, and both should feel happy with the exchange.

A choice without pressure

The third check was important too: nobody should feel rushed or pushed. Dev noticed that Jordan was rushing him.

Shiny is not the whole story

Dev did not really like dragons. He liked the shine. The coin asked which he would prefer: 20 cards he liked, or one shiny card he did not care about.

A different proposal

Dev chose to keep the cards he enjoyed. He offered two of his extra cards for one of Jordan’s space-robot cards instead.

A card he really wanted

Jordan agreed. Dev traded two extra cards and received a space-robot card that he really wanted. The new proposal suited both of them.

What stayed in the collection?

Dev still had 18 of his original cards, plus his new space-robot card. That made 19 cards altogether. He was happy with his thoughtful choice.

You can say no

The coin reminded Dev that saying no is always an option. A shiny card does not mean you have to accept a swap.

Ashwika’s money-smart moment

Ashwika brought the clues together. Trading means swapping what you have for what you want, without using money in these examples.

A fair-swap checklist

Think about what each person gives and gets. Check that both people want the exchange. Take your time, and remember that either person can say no.

Your turn to wonder

What might you enjoy sharing or swapping with a friend? Talk about your idea with a grown-up. For food, follow your school’s rules and ask a grown-up first.

Keep thinking, keep discovering

Tell a grown-up what you learned. Think carefully about your choices, and come back to Ashwika’s Story World for another discovery.

Your fair-swap discovery

Dev kept 18 of his 20 original cards and received 1 new card: 19 altogether. Before a real swap, ask a grown-up for help. Understand the offer, check what both people want and take your time. Either person can say no.

Draw two original pretend cards. What might each person enjoy? Your creative ideas are not scored.

Ask a grown-up to help with any real exchange.
